The future of public health under President Trump
How might the election of Donald Trump as the next U.S. president impact public health over the next four years? Harvard Chan School health policy expert John McDonough offers his perspective in a Q&A.

Climate talks should consider ‘immediate’ health burden of air pollution
Air pollution is not only causing long-term damage to the planet and human health, it is already killing millions of people worldwide, according to a STAT editorial by David Hunter and Francesca Dominici.

What's to be done about the chronic pain epidemic?
With misuse of opioids on the rise, experts discussed the causes, treatment, and impact of chronic pain at a recent Forum.

November 17, 2016
Event Highlights

Voices in Leadership
Today: Live webcast
Former CBS anchor Bob Schieffer
November 17
12:30 PM

Fall Social
November 17
3:00-4:00 PM
Kresge Cafeteria

World AIDS Day Symposium
HIV & Opioids: Crisis in Indiana, Boston, and Beyond
December 1
8–9:30 AM
Kresge G2

Listen: Tips for a sustainable Thanksgiving
In this week’s podcast: It may be hard to have a healthy Thanksgiving, but there are ways you can lessen the environmental impact of your holiday meal.
Three faculty honored for cardiovascular research
Two Harvard Chan School faculty members recently received Senior Science Awards from the International Aspirin Foundation. Nancy Cook (at right) and Julie Buring, professors in the Department of Epidemiology, were honored along with Michael Gaziano, who teaches in the Epidemiology of Aging program.

Neurodiversity: Inclusion, Acceptance, and Human Rights
On Friday, November 18, from 3:30-5:00 PM in Kresge G1, author Steve Silberman and autism rights advocate Ari Ne’eman will lead an interactive discussion on the history of autism and the pursuit of human rights and inclusion for people with autism. RSVP here.

New fellowship at Center on the Developing Child
The Djokovic Science and Innovation Fellowship supports the dissertation research of Harvard University doctoral students whose research aligns with the mission of the Center, which is to drive science-based innovation that achieves breakthrough outcomes for children facing adversity.

In the News
Human health risks from hydroelectric projects
Sexual assault survivors urged to combat election stress by getting involved
Alcohol in moderation can be good for the heart
VA reflects American history
What will Donald Trump’s victory mean for the health of America?
Good heart health can help your brain, too

You're receiving this email because you are a staff member or academic appointee.
Unsubscribe

Quick links:
Latest news coverage | Event calendar
Kiosk issue archive | School home page
Download our app for iPhone and Android | Read Harvard Public Health magazine

Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health | 90 Smith Street | Boston, MA 02120
Contact us