Kiosk

Checklist program improved childbirth care
A checklist and coaching intervention to improve facility-based childbirth care and reduce deaths of women and newborns in India achieved significant gains in the quality of care during labor and delivery.

Discrimination in America
A new poll from Harvard Chan School, NPR, and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation finds younger women and college-educated women are more likely than older women to say they've experienced slurs, offensive comments, and harassment.

New program enables sharing of lab equipment
Harvard Chan School's new Shared Instrumentation Network is a website that lists equipment available for community members to use.

In the news

Podcast: Nuts and heart health
Health insurance uncertainty could lead to poorer health, more deaths

Targeting tumors Researchers have identified a key metabolic vulnerability in some types of tumor cells and... discovered a way to exploit it by harnessing immunosuppressant drugs.

Around the School

School hosts 'Senior Prom'
On December 3 Harvard Chan School hosted 175 local residents for an evening of fun, dancing, and dinner during the 2017 Mission Hill Senior Prom.

Surveying the damage
Harvard Chan alum Michael Grant, SM ’13, SD ’16, spent 25 days in Puerto Rico helping to assess the state of the island’s medical infrastructure in the wake of Hurricane Maria.

Scholars at Risk nominations
Harvard is now accepting nominations for the Scholars at Risk program, which provides one-year fellowships to scholars, writers, artists, and public intellectuals from around the world who face persecution. The deadline for nominations is January 1, 2018.

Call for applications: Center on the Developing Child’s Djokovic Science and Innovation Fellowships his one-year fellowship provides financial support, training, and workshops to advanced Harvard University doctoral students whose independent research aligns with the Center’s mission, which is to drive science-based innovation to achieve breakthrough outcomes for children facing adversity. Applications are due on December 22 by 5:00 PM ET.

January is Wellbeing Month
The Harvard Longwood Campus is kicking off the new year with “Wellbeing” in mind. Check out all the amazing talks, yoga sessions, resources. and more available starting the first week in January.